The henloft. All this is nought,
Harke you miſtreſſe Anne.

Shal. Hee will make you ioynter of three hundred pound a yeare, he ſhall make you a Gentlewoman.

Slend. I by God that I will, come cut and longtaile, as good as any is in Gloſterſhire, vnder the degree of a Squire.

Anne. O God, how many groſſe faults are hid
And couered in three hundred pound a yeate?
Well M. Slender, within a day or two ile tell you more

Slen. I thanke you good miſtris Anne; Vnckle I ſhal haue her.

Quic. M. Shallow, M. Page would pray you to come in, and you M. Slender, and you miſtris Anne.

Slend. Well Nurſe, if you'l ſpeake for me,
Ile giue you more then Ile talke of.

Exit all but Quickly.

Quic. Indeed I will, Ile ſpeake what I can for you,
But ſpecially for Maſter Fenton,
But ſpecially of all for my Maſter.
And indeed I will do what I can for them all three.

Exit.

Enter Miſtris Foord and her two men.

Miſ: For. Do you heare? when your Maſter comes take vp this basket as you did before, and if your Maſter bid you ſet it downe, obey him.

Ser. I will forſooth.

Enter Sir Iohn.

Miſ. foord. Sir Iohn, welcome.

Fal. What, are you ſure of your husband now?

Miſ. foord. He is gone a birding ſir Iohn, & I hope will
